Statewide

All Alaska Pediatric Partnership: $200,000 to this nonprofit network of health care providers, public health leaders and community groups to develop a new shared model of pediatric subspecialty care to serve Alaska children with complex health needs. The current system is unstable, and care is sometimes not available in state. Among the areas being examined are oncology, hematology, psychiatry, rheumatology and neurodevelopmental services. The grant will support development of a business plan and model for Alaska.

Interior Alaska

Cold Climate Housing Research Center: $250,000 for repairs and upgrades to the organization’s Research & Testing Facility in Fairbanks. The project will replace a nonworking elevator, an outdated fire protection system and a heat recovery ventilation system. It also will address basement flooding caused by thawing permafrost.

Rasmuson Foundation support also includes up to $200,000 through a low-cost loan to bridge any financial gaps as the center transitions to a partnership with the National Renewable Energy Laboratory based in Golden, Colorado, to sustain operations long term. The Alaska State Home Builders Association founded the center in 1999 to develop and test energy-efficient and cost-effective building technologies. The cold climate center is the northernmost building in the world certified as LEED Platinum, for Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design.

Southcentral Alaska

Alaska Behavioral Health (formerly Anchorage Community Mental Health Services): $300,000 to help purchase and renovate a building that will serve as an Anchorage service hub for consumer-driven behavioral healthcare. It will be next to the organization’s existing Alaska Seeds of Change facility, where youth and young adults can get vocational training and learn workplace and interpersonal skills. The expansion will allow the complementary POWER (Peer Outreach Workers Education and Referral) street outreach and drop-in center to move out of the shared space.

Camp Fire Alaska: $400,000 to help expand Camp K in Cooper Landing on the Kenai Peninsula. The 160-acre camp offers swimming, boating, hiking, target sports and arts and crafts. The expansion will add winterized cabins, restrooms, an open-air nature center, tent camping sites, extensive trail development and electricity.

Cook Inlet Native Head Start: $196,683 to purchase furnishings, fixtures and equipment for a new Head Start facility being constructed in Anchorage. This second Anchorage center for Cook Inlet Native Head Start will accommodate 32 additional students. The number of families served will grow from the current 227 to 259.
Valley Residential Services: $350,000 to support construction of a 22-unit housing development in Wasilla. Valley Residential Services, a nonprofit, is partnering with Cook Inlet Housing Authority on the development. Five apartments will be reserved for people experiencing homelessness and five for those with disabilities.

Women in Safe Homes: $200,000 to help renovate the former Ketchikan Regional Youth Facility into a domestic violence emergency shelter. The new space will include an area for covered and secure outdoor recreation and an Americans with Disabilities Act-compliant layout. It will allow flexibility and provide shelter space for all genders. WISH has provided services including shelter, education and family assistance to victims of sexual assault and domestic violence since 1978, serving Petersburg, Wrangell and communities on Prince of Wales Island as well as Ketchikan. In the last fiscal year, WISH provided safe shelter to 162 individuals and facilitated 721 counseling sessions.

Chief Seattle Club: $200,000 to support development of a nine-story multi-use building and neighboring space in Seattle’s Pioneer Square to serve people experiencing homelessness. The project is called ʔałʔał, which means home in Lushootseed, the Native language of the Seattle-area Coast Salish people. The club provides a continuum of services welcoming to Native American and Alaska Native people, and some 30% of members are Alaskans. The new development will include affordable housing, a health clinic, gathering spaces and a street level café and gallery.
